

Open House Europe

Media Monitoring Report

Introduction

Throughout the duration of the project, the Open House Europe coordinator monitored media to, in part, observe the brand's visibility and awareness across Europe. Media monitoring focused on mentions of "Open House Europe" in online websites and news outlets, capturing coverage generated by key project milestones: summits, festivals and open calls promoted throughout the three years.

A strong foundation for visibility was created through the partners' established local communication ecosystems and media relations. Partners worked in line with communication guidelines issued by the Project Coordinator, ensuring consistent references to the project across the communication efforts of each festival.

While local media relationships provided a strong basis for coverage – since each festival's communications primarily targeted local audiences – this visibility did not consistently extend beyond national contexts. To strengthen Europe-wide (and wider international) reach, the Project Coordinator made efforts in international media activity. Most notably, a media partnership with ArchDaily was established.

Media monitoring was conducted through search engine alerts (Google Alerts), which allowed keeping an eye on the project by keeping track of mentions of it online. During the project implementation period,

Coordinator:

Architektūros
fondas

alerts were set up for the keyword phrase "Open House Europe" and checked on a regular basis. Each alert was checked for relevant coverage on online news sites and logged accordingly.

Where needed, results were filtered to remove duplicates and irrelevant references. For each valid mention, basic details were recorded: publication date, outlet or website name, headline, URL and language. This approach provided an overview of when and where the project was referenced online and helped identify peaks in visibility linked to key communication activities, mentions beyond expected sources and general project reach. It is important to note that such methodology has limitations, and not all mentions online can be logged due to limitations in search engine optimisation of different websites and other technical reasons. However, it provided a wide and detailed enough overview for the projects' needs.

Throughout the duration of the project, more than 500 mentions were recorded. The complete monitoring showcases a wide and linguistically diverse coverage of the project, covering the European media landscape and reaching beyond.

Highlights

Below are three worth-mentioning highlights identified from the projects' communication activities and the media monitoring.

ArchDaily x Open House Europe Partnership

At the start of the second year of the project, a long-term media partnership was established with ArchDaily – the world's most visited architecture website. This partnership enabled the consortium to collaborate in spreading the word about quality architecture and reach wide audiences within and beyond the continent. All partner festivals were promoted in ArchDaily's events section as well as on the homepage. Furthermore, the partnership included close work with editors of ArchDaily to create unique and valuable content. Project partners shared information about culturally and architecturally significant buildings featured in their Open House festivals across Europe, and, based on this data, ArchDaily editors wrote and published articles about said buildings, furthering the reach of the project. This partnership created an invaluable opportunity to raise brand awareness, promote local festivals and contribute to the project's goals

31

Events, including 2 Annual Summits and 28 local Open House festivals, were promoted on ArchDaily.

12

Unique articles were published about buildings from Partner Festival programmes.

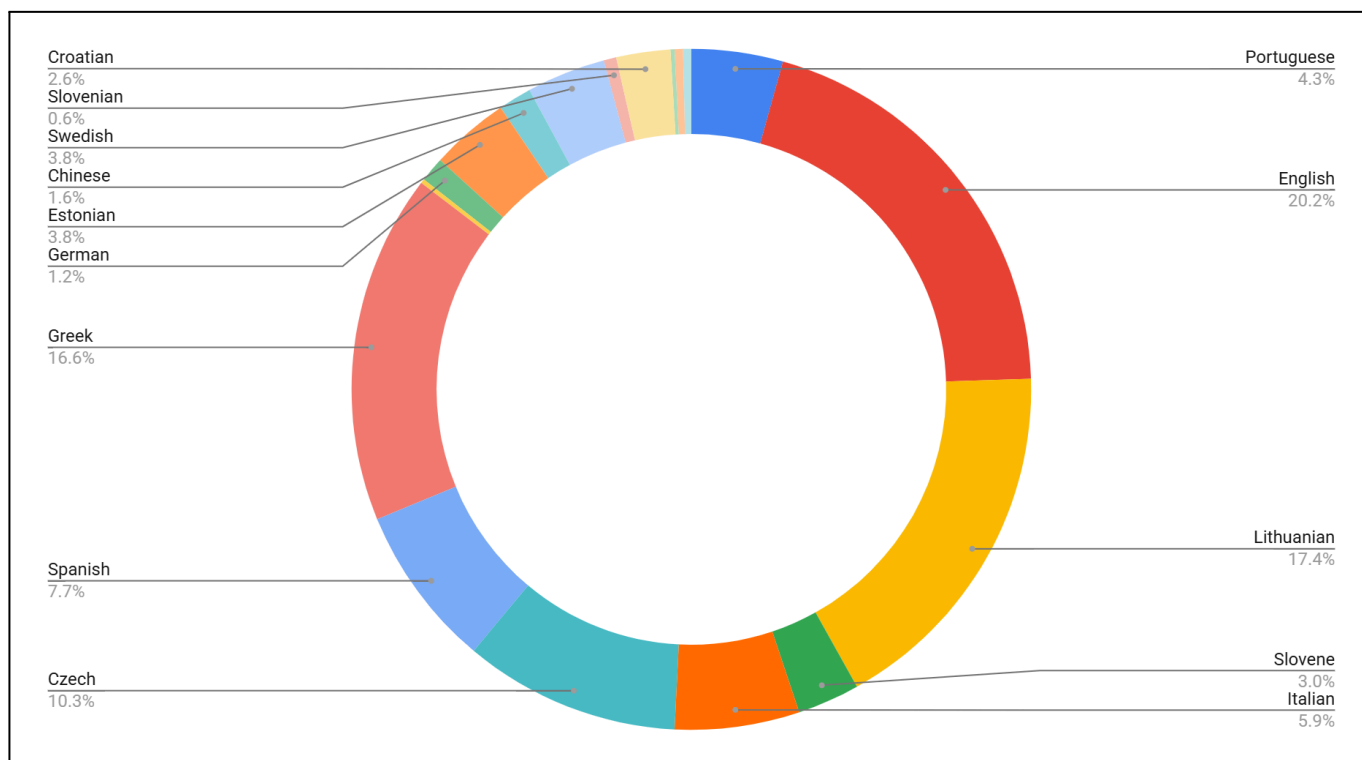

Links are provided in the mentions list below.

Interest Outside Europe

One notable finding from the media monitoring was evidence of interest in the project beyond Europe. In Taipei, Open House Taipei referenced Open House Europe in relation to the project's annual themes, recording eight online mentions during the monitoring period. The festival incorporated Open House Europe's annual themes into its own programme, suggesting that the project's thematic framework resonates with audiences and organisers outside Europe. This finding also indicates the wide reach of the Open House Europe name.

Linguistic Diversity

While English was clearly the most dominant language, media monitoring showed a wide spectrum of linguistic diversity. This metric also revealed differences in the communication approaches of various festivals – while some extensively engage with media outlets, others focus on other communication channels that are more effective at reaching their audiences. All in all, the diversity of languages of articles mentioning the project shows a wide reach of the project.
